

INTERNATIONAL CALL

International Camp against G8

Camp Inski 2006 - we already start in the year before!

The leaders of the 8 most powerful nations of the world have one big meeting every year, where they discuss the most important developments of the world's economy and politics. The huge influence of these nations means that decisions of the G8 meetings have direct and massive results for large parts of the world. Their politics stand for exploitation, poverty, social attacks and migration control. Our vision of the world is different from this. We want to build up a just world with equal rights, which is orientating itself towards basic human needs and away from overwhelming exploitation, exclusion and power.

In 2007 the governmental leaders of the G8 are meeting in Northern Germany, at the Kempinski Grand Hotel in Heiligendamm on the Baltic Sea. For years, the protests against those meetings have become symbolic places of a collective and broad-based call of „Ya Basta“- its enough. The protests in Prague, Gothenbourg, Genoa and elsewhere up to those in Gleneagles and St. Petersburg stand for multi-sided experiences at the topic of internationalism. We want to analyse and reflect the protest of 2006 in Russia, as a defined stage of our mobilisation against the 2007 G8 meeting.

We developed the idea of the Camp Inski 2006, one year before the actual G8 meeting will take place, to be able to have a continuity in praxis and theory. There we want to discuss the inhuman, neoliberal restructuring of the world, as well as exchange ideas about international and very different practices of resistance. We want to use the experiences and energies of recent years up to 2007 for organising a broad, resolute and effective international resistance.

We think of Camp Inski as a public space for the use of many groups including the trade union left, anti-racist groups, grassroots-movements, refugee self-organisations, attacks, the autonomous left, anarchists and others. However different all those people will be, we all have the desire for a different world. We are united in the fight for a globalisation of emancipation and human standards, which are in total opposition to the ideas and demands of the global capital. We want to work for basic human needs and against overwhelming exploitation, exclusion and power. In this sense Camp Inski should be a place for meeting, for exchange and for a space to discuss our different perspectives.

Besides a good life at the lovely baltic sea Camp Inski, the anti-G8 camp should include protests, including civil disobedience where practical. There are lots of local possibilities to tie into our actions. Migration, anti-fascism and the resistance against militarism and war are just some of the topics that will play a role at the Camp Inski. But we want more, because the neoliberal restructuring of the world is multi-sided. So is our resistance and our forms of resistance.

That's why we call for an active participation in the camp with workshops, actions and discussions.
